Author: Abby Sharp

You plan to send your resume to apply for a job for which you feel highly qualified. You have a chronological resume that indicates a strong work history in the field of your target job. Do you really need to include a cover letter?

Please choose only one answer:

- No. If your resume speaks for itself, there is no need to include a cover letter.
- Yes. You want a cover letter to introduce you, explain your purpose for writing, and request an interview.
- No. Resume screeners only look at the resume; the cover letter will not be read.
- Yes. Just write a sentence or two to draw the screener's attention to your resume.
